Homeless people die after bird flu vaccine trial in Poland

Three Polish doctors and six nurses are facing criminal prosecution after a number of homeless people died following medical trials for a vaccine to the H5N1 bird-flu virus.

By Matthew Day in Warsaw

Published: 4:37PM BST 02 Jul 2008

The medical staff, from the northern town of Grudziadz, are being investigated over medical trials on as many as 350 homeless and poor people last year, which prosecutors say involved an untried vaccine to the highly-contagious virus.

Authorities claim that the alleged victims received £1-2 to be tested with what they thought was a conventional flu vaccine but, according to investigators, was actually an anti bird-flu drug.

21 people died after being given the vaccine

The director of a Grudziadz homeless centre, Mieczyslaw Waclawski, told a Polish newspaper that last year, 21 people from his centre died, a figure well above the average of about eight.

Although authorities have yet to prove a direct link between the deaths and the activities of the medical staff, Poland's health minister, Ewa Kopacz, has said that the doctors and nurses involved should not return to their profession.

"It is in the interests of all doctors that those who are responsible for this are punished," the minister added.

Investigators are also probing the possibility that the medical staff may have also have deceived the pharmaceutical companies that commissioned the trials.

The suspects said that the all those involved knew that the trial involved an anti-H5N1 drug and willingly participated.

The news of the investigation will come as another blow to the reputation of Poland's beleaguered and poverty-stricken national health service. In 2002, a number of ambulance medics were found guilty of killing their patients for commissions from funeral companies.

EVEN THOUGH THIS WAS DIRECTED UNDER THE AUSPICES OF A PHARMACEUTICAL TRIAL, THE DOCTORS AND NURSES WERE THE FIRST TO BE CHARGED. NO MEDICAL PRACTITIONER WOULD DELIBERATELY BOTCH A VACCINATION TRIAL. THINK ABOUT IT.

UNICEF Nigerian Polio Vaccine Contaminated with Sterilizing Agents Scientist Finds Scientist says things discovered in vaccines are "harmful, toxic"

KADUNA, Nigeria, March 11, 2004 (LifeSiteNews.com) - A UNICEF campaign to vaccinate Nigeria's youth against polio may have been a front for sterilizing the nation. Dr. Haruna Kaita, a pharmaceutical scientist and Dean of the Faculty of Pharmaceutical Sciences of Ahmadu Bello University in Zaria, took samples of the vaccine to labs in India for analysis.

Using WHO-recommended technologies like Gas Chromatography (GC) and Radio-Immuno assay, Dr. Kaita, upon analysis, found evidence of serious contamination. "Some of the things we discovered in the vaccines are harmful, toxic; some have direct effects on the human reproductive system," he said in an interview with Kaduna's Weekly Trust. "I and some other professional colleagues who are Indians who were in the Lab could not believe the discovery," he said.

A Nigerian government doctor tried to persuade Dr. Kaita that the contaminants would have no bearing on human reproduction. "...I was surprised when one of the federal government doctors was telling me something contrary to what I have learned, studied, taught and is the common knowledge of all pharmaceutical scientists -- that estrogen cannot induce an anti-fertility response in humans," he said. "I found that argument very disturbing and ridiculous."

When asked by the Trust why Dr. Kaita felt the drug manufacturers would have contaminated the Oral Polio Vaccine, he gave three reasons: "These manufacturers or promoters of these harmful things have a secret agenda which only further research can reveal. Secondly they have always taken us in the third world for granted, thinking we don't have the capacity, knowledge and equipment to conduct tests that would reveal such contaminants. And very unfortunately they also have people to defend their atrocities within our midst, and worst still some of these are supposed to be our own professionals who we rely on to protect our interests."

Dr. Kaita is demanding that "those who imported this fake drug in the name of Polio Vaccines...be prosecuted like any other criminal."

The campaign to rid Nigeria of polio is in its fourth year. Officials there claim that all contaminated vaccines have been exhausted and replaced by uncontaminated batches.

In a rhetorical conclusion to the interview, Dr. Kaita asked "What plans has the government put in place to help children who have been given these toxic and contaminated vaccines in case they start reacting to them?"

This is not the first time UNICEF has been embroiled in a controversy over sterilizing agents in vaccines. LifeSiteNews.com reported that in 1995, the Catholic Women's League of the Philippines won a court order halting a UNICEF anti-tetanus program because the vaccine had been laced with B-hCG, which when given in a vaccine permanently causes women to be unable to sustain a pregnancy. The Supreme Court of the Philippines found the surreptitious sterilization program had already vaccinated three million women, aged 12 to 45. B-hCG-laced vaccine was also found in at least four other developing countries.

Nigeria's population growth curves were too aggressive for various population agencies...

"There have therefore been strong warnings from population agencies for Nigeria to decrease the rate of population growth through vigorous family planning programmes, 'otherwise the future generations of Nigeria would not have enough food, housing, education, health services and jobs'".

A WELL-MEANING BUT CONTROVERSIAL POPULATION POLICY

Nigeria has formally adopted a population policy to protect the health of its mothers and children through measures to limit population growth. The announcement came from Prince Bola Ajibola, the Attorney General and Minister of Justice, who noted that "the prevailing cultures, religions and traditions make it an onerous task but it is a task that must be done". The current population of Nigeria is not exactly known and generally extrapolations are made from the 1963 census figures. Population Bureau International, an American based census bureau, has estimated the population to be 108.6 million. The World Development Report for 1987 puts the growth rate at 3.4%—one of the highest in the world—and, according to a United Nations demographic estimate, by the year 2025 Nigeria will become the 4th most populous nation in the world with 338 million people, coming only after China, India, and the USSR. The infant mortality rate has fallen from 187 per 1000 in 1960 to 90; the adult death rate has dropped from 27 per 1000 to 13; and life expectancy has risen from 37 to 54 years. There have therefore been strong warnings from population agencies for Nigeria to decrease the rate of population growth through vigorous family planning programmes, "otherwise the future generation of Nigerians would not have enough food, housing, education, health services and jobs".

The goals of the National Population Policy are to improve the standards of living and the quality of life of the people; to promote their health and welfare especially through preventing premature death and illness among high-risk groups of mothers and children; to achieve lower population growth rates through reduction of birth rates by voluntary fertility regulation methods that are compatible with the attainment of economic and social goals of the nation; and to achieve a more even distribution of population between urban and rural areas. As regards mothers and children, the goals are to reduce the proportion of women who get married before the age of 18 years by 50% by 1995 and by 80% by the year 2000; to achieve birth spacing of a minimum of 2 or more years in at least 50% of fertile married women by 1995 and in 80% by the year 2000; to reduce pregnancies of mothers below 18 years and above 35 years of age by 50% by 1995 and by 80% by the year 2000; to reduce the proportion of women bearing more than four children by 50%

"During the recent National Immunisation Campaign (vaccination for childhood diseases and tetanus toxoid for pregnant women), in some villages the women escaped and hid in the bushes thinking that they were going to be given injections to stop them from having children."

Virus mix-up by lab could have resulted in pandemic

It's emerged that virulent H5N1 bird flu was sent out by accident from an Austrian lab last year and given to ferrets in the Czech Republic before anyone realised. Last December, the Austrian branch of US vaccine company Baxter sent a batch of ordinary human H3N2 flu, altered so it couldn't replicate, to Avir Green Hills Biotechnology, also in Austria. In February, a lab in the Czech Republic working for Avir alerted Baxter that, unexpectedly, ferrets inoculated with the sample had died. It turned out the sample contained live H5N1, which Baxter uses to make vaccine. The two seem to have been mixed in error.

Markus Reinhard of Baxter says no one was infected because the H3N2 was handled at a high level of containment. But Ab Osterhaus of Erasmus University in the Netherlands says: "We need to go to great lengths to make sure this kind of thing doesn't happen."

Accidental release of a mixture of live H5N1 and H3N2 viruses could have resulted in dire consequences. While H5N1 doesn't easily infect people, H3N2 viruses do. If someone exposed to a mixture of the two had been simultaneously infected with both strains, he or she could have served as an incubator for a hybrid virus able to transmit easily to and among people.

Swine flu vaccine a boon for Baxter

Worldwide demand for a swine flu vaccine is developing into a boon for Baxter International Inc.

On a day the Deerfield-based medical product giant reported a 13 percent boost in second-quarter profits, Chairman and Chief Executive Robert Parkinson said the company's plant in the Czech Republic was running at capacity as it works to fill orders for 80 million dosages from five countries.

Baxter shares jumped nearly 3 percent, or $1.41 a share, to $54.50 in Thursday afternoon trading on the New York Stock Exchange.

Baxter has all the work it can handle and expects production of vaccines to combat the H1N1 virus to continue indefinitely, particularly as strains mutate.

"There will be demand for whatever we will be able to produce," Parkinson told Wall Street analysts on a conference call to discuss company earnings Thursday morning.

Baxter said it would begin shipping dosages of swine flu vaccine around the world by the end of this month. Baxter could reap $30 million to $40 million in revenues from H1N1 contracts, but Parkinson cautioned Wall Street analysts against altering Baxter's earnings forecasts.

Baxter's vaccine orders do not include the U.S., which announced this week it was working with other manufacturers that are already developing seasonal flu products and have more capacity. Baxter has said it continues to talk to U.S. health officials.

Baxter has a newer cell-based manufacturing technology that does not require processing vaccines with chicken eggs and can cut production times by several weeks. Because its vaccine technology is new, Baxter has not yet been approved to sell a seasonal product in the U.S. and tends to generate revenue from countries looking to stockpile vaccines to combat pandemic threats.

Indonesia accuses US of bird flu plot

Mark Forbes Herald Correspondent in Jakarta
February 20, 2008

THE Indonesian Health Minister has said the United States and the World Health Organisation are part of a global conspiracy to profit from the spread of bird flu and the US may use samples to produce biological weapons.

The views of Dr Siti Fadilah Supari, outlined in her new book, threaten to undermine efforts to control the spread of avian influenza. With 104 deaths, nearly half the world total, Indonesia is the new hotspot for the virus.

Despite claims by the minister that she has agreed to share virus samples and allow all nations access to resulting vaccines, Indonesia is still blocking sharing samples from human victims.

Applications to send more than 200 samples from chickens to an Australian laboratory had also been refused, inquiries by the Herald have revealed.

In the book, Dr Supari writes that WHO laboratories forwarded influenza viruses to Western companies so they could profit by selling vaccines back to developing countries: "The system of world health management has been very exploitative. It has been controlled by inhumanly desires, based on the greediness to raise capital and to control the world."

Some Indonesian samples had been sent to a US Defence Department laboratory, Dr Supari says, adding that "some of our seed viruses had been in a laboratory known as a facility developing biological weapons in a superpower country".

Privately, officials said Dr Supari's belief that she was engaged on a God-driven crusade against an evil and "neo-colonialist" world health system - on the book's cover she describes herself as the "divine hand behind avian influenza" - had caused her to lose touch with reality.

The President, Susilo Bambang Yudhoyono, appears to have endorsed the book, having written its introduction.

Dr Yudhoyono supports Dr Supari's claim that the virus is under control in Indonesia, stating the "occurrence rate and the number of affected areas are decreasing".

The WHO declined to comment and no US officials were available.

Investigators say Swine Flu Man-made in North American Labs

Wayne Madsen on Russia Today reports on the uselessness of any standard vaccinations due to H1N1's high mutation rate, and the plan for Big Pharma to profit from this...

News Reporter - "An American investigative journalist who claims that swine flu strains have been engineered in two universities in the US and Canada, says they've been deliberately designed to resist vaccines. Wayne Madsen also says that his also so called 'nightmare scenario' in which swine flu could mutate with bird flu has been suppressed by the World Health Organization for political reasons. He joins me now, live from Washington..

Wayne, what exactly is your accusation then? Are you saying that Swine flu is actually manufactured, or why on earth would anyone want to do that, and why, and who?"

Wayne - "Well it is a variety of reasons for that. One is that it would increase sales for new vaccine manufacturers in the pharmaceutical industry. The other would be to just create this world wide crisis. We know a lot of people thrive economically on crisis situations. I reported in May, after speaking to people who are researching, these are scientists researching this new hybrid flu - that it was basically engineered from genetic material taken from a dead inuit women who died from the 1918 pandemic, also known as the Spanish Flu. Now one reasearcher told me after investigating this particular flu, this is a Subtype A influenza. It contains a enzyme called a polymerase, that exists in all Subtype A influenza's. It was determined that this particular flu was gene spliced from two forms of human flu, two forms of swine flu, and one form of human flu. The problem is when they looked at the molecular clock of this enzyme is that it was rapidly mutating in humans. The problem of that is of course, any new mutated version of this virus would be immune to any vaccine already created to handle the previous type of virus..."

H1N1 flu: WHO rubbishes lab test gone wrong theory

NEW DELHI: The World Health Organisation on Thursday debunked the theory that the deadly H1N1 swine flu virus was the result of a lab test gone awfully wrong.

HARLEQUIN

The theory was recently floated by a renowned Australian virologist Adrian Gibbs who said that the new flu virus may have been created in a laboratory having accidentally evolved in eggs that scientists use to grow viruses in and drug makers use to make vaccines with.

WHO's assistant director-general Dr Keiji Fukuda said, "Based on our evaluation, the conclusion is that the hypothesis does not really stand up to scrutiny. The evidence actually suggests that this is a naturally occurring virus and not a laboratory derived virus."

Dr Fukuda said the WHO made the conclusion after a series of discussions with scientists in its five collaborating influenza centres, virologists across the world, experts from the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) and the World Organization for Animal Health (OIE).

According to WHO, all the scientists were asked to look at the evidence and then provide their opinion on whether it was a credible hypothesis or not. "We took the hypothesis very seriously, because of the nature of the hypothesis and because of the credible nature of the scientist. Because we are dealing with an influenza virus that is new, which originates from swine, we contacted the FAO and OIE," Dr Fukuda said.

Gibbs had said that genetic markers suggested that the combination of genes in the virus was not a natural event.

Dr Gibbs, who had studied the gene sequences of the swine flu virus posted on public data banks, argued that it must have been grown in eggs, the medium used in vaccine laboratories.

He reached that conclusion, he said, because the new virus was not closely related to known ones and because it had more of the amino acid lysine and more mutations than typical strains of swine flu.

CONCLUSIONS...
